Women, Pilgrimage, and Rituals of Healing in Modern and Ancient Greece
This is the third and concluding work of the author’s analyses of women’s rituals from festivals.

Previous publications:

Women, Pilgrimage, and Rituals of Healing in Modern and Ancient Greece:

A Comparison

By
Evy Johanne Håland

Cambridge Scholars Publishing
This book is dedicated to the memory of my Pappa, Elling Johan Håland (1926-2019),
with thanks and love.
TABLE OF CONTENTS

Table: Schematic Overview of Attic Months ............................................. x

List of Figures............................................................................................ xi

A Note on Transliteration ........................................................................ xxi

Acknowledgements ............................................................................... xxiii

Introduction .......................................................................................... xxvii

Chapter One ................................................................................................ 1
Introduction: Rituals of Health and Healing in Greece
  Religious Festivals and Rituals Connected with Healing
  Situating the Mediterranean Context in Order to Bridge a Cultural Divide
  Situating the Gendered Values: From Male Honour toward a Poetics of Womanhood
  Modern and Ancient Women in Greece
  Healing
  Women and the Female Sphere
  A Method New to the Study of Antiquity: Fieldwork Combined with Studies of Ancient Sources, Some Preliminary Notes
  From Fieldwork in Modern Greece to Ancient Healing Rituals: An Introduction
  Conclusion

Chapter Two ............................................................................................. 41
Healing Water: The Life-Giving Spring at Athens and Beyond
  Introduction
  Cleaning the Akropolis Caves
  “New” Friday in the “White Week”: the Celebration of the Life-Giving Spring in 1992
  The Celebration of the Life-Giving Spring on “New Friday” After the Turn of the Century
Women, Pilgrimage, and Rituals of Healing in Modern and Ancient Greece: A Comparison

Chapter Six ................................................................. 265
From Modern to Ancient Deities and Their Sacred Animals
The Snakes of Markopoulo
From the Snakes of Cocullo to the Ancient World: Some Theoretical Reflections
Ancient Snakes: their Cult and Ambivalent Relationships to Gender
Healing and Malicious Snakes and Other Healing Animals
The Destroying and Healing Capabilities of Snakes and their Connection with Women
Animal Sacrifices as Votive Dedications to be Healed
Healing and Regenerating Blood

Chapter Seven ................................................................. 317
Colours, Smell, Plants, Herbs, and Other Healing Remedies
Introduction
Women and Plant Lore

Chapter Eight ................................................................. 382
Healing and Protective Amulets, Votive Gifts, and Offerings of Thanks
Some Notes on the Manufacturing of Amulets Predominantly within the Female Sphere
Healing Amulets
The Evil Eye and Protective Amulets
Votive Gifts and Votive Body Parts
From Agia Athanasia of Aigaleo to the “Ephesia Grammata”:
the Healing Power of Letters and Words

Chapter Nine ................................................................. 442
Healing Dance and Movement
Dance with the Help of a Deity, or by Oneself? Therapeutic Dance in Greece: From the Anastenaria Festival of Modern Greece to the Ancient Context
Women in the Anastenaria
Dance and Movement in Modern Healing Rituals
Ancient Dancing and Worshipping Women

Chapter Ten ................................................................. 496
Summaries of the Chapters and Some Concluding Reflections

Sources and Bibliography .................................................. 511

Index .............................................................................. 560
Table: Schematic Overview of Attic Months

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Attic Month</th>
<th>Duration</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Hekatombaion</td>
<td>July-August</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Metageitnion</td>
<td>August-September</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boedromion</td>
<td>September-October</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pyanepsion</td>
<td>October-November</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maimakterion</td>
<td>November-December</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Poseideon</td>
<td>December-January</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gamelion</td>
<td>January-February</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthesterion</td>
<td>February-March</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Elaphebolion</td>
<td>March-April</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mounichion</td>
<td>April-May</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thargelion</td>
<td>May-June</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Skirophorion</td>
<td>June-July</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
LIST OF FIGURES

All photographs are by the author unless otherwise stated.

Figure 1a. A woman receiving Communion during the festival dedicated to the Life-Giving Spring (Zoodochos Pigi), Athens, Friday, 20 April 2012 ................................................................. 3

Figure 1b. Pilgrims sharing kesketsi, the traditional dish cooked from the sacrificial bull, on the summit of Tauros (Bull) mountain, the island of Lesbos, 27 June 1992 .......................................................... 4

Figure 2. Pitsa Panels: a painted votive tablet (pinax) for the nymphae, Archaic Greece, ca. 540-530 BCE. National Archaeological Museum, Athens (henceforth Athens N.M.) 16,464. (Downloaded 2 July 2023 from: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Pitsa_panels#/media/File:Greek religion-animalsacrifice-corinth-6C-BCE.jpg) ................................... 14

Figure 3. The bull, which is a personal offering, is paraded through the streets of the village of Agia Paraskevi on the first day of the festival of Agios Charalambos, 26 June 1992 ................................. 15

Figure 4. Women drink holy, healing and fertility-ensuring water from the Life-Giving Spring. Tinos, 14 August 2007 ................................. 17

Figure 5. Girls at the fountain (=ABV 334.3, see Keuls 1993: Fig. 210) ........................................ 20

Figure 6. Women venerating the right-hand tomb of Agios Nektarios, the island of Aegina, 8 November 2011 .............................................. 21

Figure 7. Votive relief from the Asklepieion of Athens. Legs and arms of Asklepios at the left, and Hygieia leaning against a tree. An altar in front of the deities is approached by worshippers: a slave holds a basket and leads a sacrificial ram, followed by a family and a servant carrying a basket covered by a cloth, ca. 350-300 BCE. Athens N.M. 1333 ................................................................. 28

Figure 8. Pilgrims sleeping in the court of the sanctuary on Tinos, waiting for a miracle during the night between 14 and 15 August 1993 .......... 34

Figure 9. Votive offerings of body parts in terracotta from the Asklepieion at Korinth, late fifth to fourth centuries BCE.
Figure 10. The cave-church dedicated to the Panagia, the Life-Giving Spring at Athens. Behind the low wall is the Holy Spring, 4 April 1992.

Figure 11. The entrance to the Sacred Spring, the Akropolis Cave at Athens, 30 August 2006.

Figure 12. The cave-church dedicated to the Panagia Chrysopeîliôttisa, or Chapel of Our Lady of the Golden Cavern at Athens, 4 April 1992.

Figure 13. A man walking on crutches sits next to the spring and is occupied with drawing water, in the cave-church dedicated to the Life-Giving Spring, during the festival celebrated on “New/White” Friday after the Resurrection of Christ, Athens, 1 May 1992.

Figure 14. One of the impatient guards working at the Akropolis at Athens within the cave-church dedicated to the Life-Giving Spring, 1 May 1992.

Figures 15a-b. The cave-church dedicated to the Panagia, the Life-Giving Spring at Athens. Behind the low wall is the Holy Spring, and in front of the altar is the icon depicting the Life-Giving Spring, 30 August 2006.

Figure 16. Women fetching and tasting the water in the cave dedicated to the Panagia, the Life-Giving Spring, during the festival celebrated on “New/White” Friday after the Resurrection of Christ, Athens, 20 April 2012.

Figure 17. Votive relief with nymphs. Athens N.M. 1966 (see Travlos 1971: Fig. 193).

Figure 18. Horos krenes (“boundary of the spring”), the Akropolis area, Athens, 30 August 2006.

Figure 19. A child is baptised in the baptistry, which is located next to the chapel of the Life-Giving Spring, Tinos, August 1994.

Figure 20. The Panagia, Mother of God (Theotokos), at the entrance to the chapel dedicated to the Life-Giving Spring, the Church of the Annunciation on Tinos, August 2007.

Figure 21. The Peirene Fountain, Korinth.
Figures 22a-b. Selecting tamata at the church of Agia Marina. Athens, 16 July 2019 and 17 July 2011............................................................ 96
Figure 23. Tama in hand, a black-clad pilgrim woman venerates the reliquary of Agia Marina in her church. Athens, 17 July 2019 .......... 99
Figure 24. Pilgrims leave their pilgrimage clothes (penitential robes) as dedications in the sanctuary of Agia Marina, hanging them on the fence at the entrance to her cave. Athens, 17 July 2019......... 100
Figure 25. Tamata, including baby clothes, offered to an icon of Agia Marina in her church. Athens, 17 July 2011 ......................... 102
Figure 26. People line up to worship the icon of Agia Paraskeuē in her sanctuary on the eve of her festival. Tinos, 25 July 2012........... 105
Figure 27. Tamata, depicting eyes, have been dedicated to the decorated main icon of Agia Paraskeuē in her sanctuary on the eve of her festival. Tinos, 23 July 2019.............................. 107
Figure 28. The first part of the ceremonial blessing of the offerings of bread in the courtyard outside the sanctuary of Agia Paraskeuē, on the eve of her festival. Tinos, 25 July 2011 ......................... 111
Figure 29. The culmination of the ceremonial blessing of the offerings of bread in the courtyard outside the sanctuary of Agia Paraskeuē, on the eve of her festival: The priests line up holding each other’s shoulders, paralleling the circular round dance. Tinos, 25 July 2012.. 112
Figure 30. Votive relief in the shape of a cave inside of which three nymphs dance. The river God Acheloos is depicted behind them, and three worshippers are shown to the left. Above the cave Pan plays the pipes next to a goat, ca. 325-300 BCE. Athens N.M. 3874 .............. 118
Figure 31. The festival of Agia Marina at Athens on 17 July 2011: at night people sit by the dome directly above the cave-church.........137
Figure 32. In the calendar frieze on the Church of Agios Eleutherios (Little Metropolis) in the centre of Athens, the Thesmophoria is represented by a woman carrying a closed basket on her head (see Deubner 1932: Figs. 34-40). ................................. 139
Figures 33a-b. a: During the festival dedicated to the Dormition on Tinos, the icon is carried in procession, while the waiting pilgrims squeeze themselves underneath to be healed, 15 August 1993 (photograph by Hartmut Müller-Stauffenberg). b: Formerly pilgrims laid in the street named Euangelistrias, waiting for the icon to be passed over them. © Archive, Photogonia, Tinos ........................................... 150
Figure 34. Pilgrims fetch holy, healing, fertility-ensuring water from the Life-Giving Spring (Zōodochos Pēgē). Tinos, 14 August 2010 .... 152
Figure 35. The holy icon on Tinos: A worshipper wipes off the “sweat” from the icon with a wad of cotton wool, which becomes an
List of Figures

amulet, August 1993 ................................................................. 154

Figure 36. A mother crawling on her knees along the kilometre-long way from the harbour to the Church of the Annunciation, where the icon of the Annunciation is located, with a sick child on her back in the hope of finding healing. Tinos, 14 August 2005 ...................... 156

Figure 37. A pilgrim mother changes clothes on her daughter, whose body is covered by scars from having been seriously burnt. Tinos, 14 August 2019 ............................................................. 158

Figure 38. After the boy had surgery in a children’s hospital in Australia, a newspaper wrote about the successful operation. Tinos, August 1993 ................................................................. 161

Figure 39. In the Tinos sanctuary archive we find letters from several categories of believers; many letters mention both white and black magic. Tinos, August 1993 ........................................ 162

Figure 40. Votive relief from the Asklepieion in Piraeus. Asklepios leans on his staff in front of an altar, receiving a sheep offering brought by a slave. A family of worshippers approaches at the left, while the right edge is occupied by a snake, ca. 400-375 BCE. Athens N.M. 1407 ................................................................. 187

Figure 41. Votive relief from the Asklepieion of Piraeus, ca. 350 BCE. Ephorate of Antiquities of Piraeus and Islands/Archaeological Museum of Piraeus, 405 ....................... 194

Figure 42. Votive plaque dedicated to Demeter, fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 5256 ................................................................. 196

Figure 43. Votive relief from Epidauros, ca. 350-300 BCE. Athens N.M. 1426 ................................................................. 201

Figure 44. Boeotian red-figured krater (mixing vessel), ca. 400 BCE. Athens N.M. 1393. Photograph by Irini Miari ............... 202

Figure 45. Worshipping the Panagia on her deathbed on the eve of the “Ninth day’s ritual of the Panagia”. Tinos, 22 August 1993. The silver figure is touched with apotropaic and fertility-bestowing amulets before they are crossed three times over the figure ........ 208

Figures 46a-d. Passing the clothes (inside a bundle) of a sick child over the figure and under the canopy three times in a cyclical movement, thus encircling it. Tinos, 22 August 1993 ........ 210-211

Figures 47a-b. People venerating Agia Pelagia’s head in her church. Flowers, a tama depicting a man, and yellow-brown penitential candles have been put next to the head just in front of the marble vase (47a); a towel is passed over the head (47b). Monastery of Kekhrovouno. Tinos, 23 July 2012 and 2013 ............... 217
Figures 48a-b. Agios Gerasimos’ relics are carried in procession and passed over the sick, Kephallonia, 16 August 1992 .......................... 219
Figures 49a-b. Pilgrims listen to Agios Nektarios’ footsteps at his original tomb, Aegina, 8 November 2011 and 2012 .......................... 226
Figure 50. Pilgrim women worship Agios Ephraim at his tomb, Nea Makri, 18 July 2019 ........................................................................ 234
Figure 51. The “Louvre doll”, a nude female voodoo doll in kneeling position, bound and pierced with thirteen pins. Found in Egypt in a terracotta vase with a lead tablet bearing a binding spell (katadesmos). Louvre Museum, Paris, E.27145. (Downloaded 01 August 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Voodoo_doll_Louvre_E27145b.jpg) ............................................................................................. 239
Figure 52. Stamnos (mixing jar) by the Dionysos Painter: Women drawing wine, drinking, and dancing in front of a bearded mask of Dionysos hanging on a column (=ARV 1151,2, see ARVcl. 177)...... 245
Figure 53. A relief from Epidaurus shows the infant Askelpios holding a bird in his left hand and a bronze snake in his right. His nurse, the nymph Trygon, walks towards him, holding a bird in her left hand, late fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 1424 .......................... 251
Figure 54. Marble votive relief in the shape of a naiskos (small temple), found in the sanctuary of Amphiaras at Oropos, 400-350 BCE. Athens N.M. 3369. (Downloaded 04 July 2019 from: https://www.namuseum.gr/wp-content/uploads/2018/10/3369_lightbox.jpg) ...................................................................................... 256
Figure 55. The “Spartan hero relief” depicts a couple seated on a throne, with a snake rising up behind. The heroine holds a pomegranate. Two devotees approach the couple with offerings. The relief may depict the local heroine Alexandra who was worshipped in Amyklai together with Agamemnon, ca. 540 BCE. (Downloaded 01 August 2021 from: https://artsandculture.google.com/asset/spartan-hero-relief-unknown/5AFBjzWk_sMP_w.)........................................................ 262
Figure 56. Red-figure lekythos (high narrow perfume/oil flask) showing a woman about to throw a dog into a pit, which might illustrate a dog sacrifice to Hekate, fifth century BCE. Athens N.M. 695. Photograph by George Fafalis ................................................... 263
Figure 57. A postcard depicting the icon of the Panagia and Child Decorated with snakes, the village of Markopoulo, Kephallonia, August 1992 ......................................................... 268
Figure 58. The officiating bishop holds one of the snakes in the same hand with which he holds his sceptre, Markopoulo, the eve of 15 August 1992 ................................................................. 270

Figures 59a-b. Saint Domenico, covered with snakes during the procession, and Serpari carrying snakes walking behind the statue of the saint (b), Cocullo, May 1987 ........................................ 275

Figure 60. Personified snake, “The Three-Bodied Daemon”, 570 BCE. From the West Pediment of Hekatompedon. Akropolis Museum (hereafter Akr.), Athens, 35 plus. (Downloaded 24 July 2022 from: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/8/8c/Three_bodied_Daemon%2C_570_BC%2C_ACMA_Acr._35_plus%2C_190719.jpg) ................................................................. 281

Figure 61. The Varvakeion Athena, a Roman marble copy (ca. 130 CE) of the colossal gold and ivory statue of the Athena Parthenos (Virgin) by Pheidias, 438 BCE. Athens N.M. 129 ....................... 282

Figure 62. Medusa with her hair of snakes and a snake under each cheek, “Antefix in the form of a Gorgon head”, ca. 510-500 BCE, Akr. 78, Athens. (Downloaded 01 August 2021 from: https://www.theacropoleumuseum.gr/en/antefix-form-gorgon-head-0) ......................... 284

Figure 63. Lararium. House of the Vettii. Roman classical wall painting, Pompeii, mid-first century, probably between 62 and 79 CE .......... 290

Figure 64. Votive relief depicting Zeus Meilichios in the form of a snake. The relief was dedicated by Aristomenes, ca. 350-300 BCE. Athens N.M. 3329. (Downloaded 29 June 2023 from: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/f/fd/Votive_relief_of_Aristomenes_to_Zeus_Meilichios_%284th_cent._B.C.%29_in_the_National_Archaeological_Museum_of_Athens_on_1_June_2018.jpg) ......................... 291

Figure 65. Statuette of Asklepios from the Asklepieion at Epidaurus. The God leans on his staff, up which climbs his sacred snake, ca. 150-100 BCE. Athens N.M. 265 ............................................. 294

Figure 66. Boeotian red-figured krater, ca. 400 BCE, Athens N.M. 1393. Photograph by Irini Miari ..................................................... 296

Figure 67. Cult of the Hero on Blaute. Dedication by Silon. A male figure is shown on a sandal (blaute). Around mid-fourth century BCE Athens N.M. 2565 ................................................................. 298

Figure 68. A pilgrim “come[s] to the Panagia as a snake”. Tinos, 14 August 2008 ........................................................................ 304

Figure 69. The holy icon depicting Taxiarchēs, the Archangel Michael in the church at the monastery in the village of Mantamados, Lesbos, July 1992 ................................................................. 312

Figure 71. Demeter, enthroned and extending her hand in benediction toward the kneeling Metaneira, who offers the triune wheat that is a recurring symbol of the mysteries. Varrese Painter, red-figure hydria (water jar), ca. 340 BCE, from Apulia. (Downloaded 22 November 2018 from: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Eleusinian_Mysteries#/media/File:Eleusinian_hydria_Antikensammlung_Berlin_1984.46_n2.jpg)

Figure 72. Some house altars awaiting the procession with the head of Agios Nektarios. Aegina, 9 November 2011

Figure 73. Pilgrim women venerate the reliquary of Agia Marina in her church, touching her reliquary and flower-decorated proskynētērio (lectern) with basil and other herbs to acquire apotropaic and fertility-bestowing amulets. Athens, 17 July 2011

Figure 74. A pilgrim woman fetches some holy earth from the hole where the miraculous icon was found. Tinos, August 1993

Figure 75. Medea holds an apple, enchanting the giant guardian snake with her song, while Jason seizes the Golden Fleece. Fragment of a Roman sarcophagus, second half of the 2nd century CE. (Downloaded: 03 June 2021 from: https://no.wikipedia.org/wiki/Medeia#/media/File:Jason_Golden_Fleece_Altemps_Inv8647.jpg)

Figure 76. Squat lekythos showing a woman with oinochoe (wine jug) and sacrificial basket, ca. 420 BCE. Athens N.M. 1285. (Downloaded 01 April 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Squat_lekythos_with_a_female_figure_(5th_cent._B.C.)_in_the_National_Archaeological_Museum_on_11_September_2018.jpg)

Figure 77. Women arrive with baskets filled with offerings of bread, wine, olive oil, and cakes on the eve of the festival dedicated to the Panagia Mesosporitissa (mesos: middle, half; sporos, spora: seed, sowing, “Panagia Half-Way-Through-the-Sowing”); that is, the “Presentation of the Panagia in the Temple”. Eleusis, 20 November 2011

Figure 78. A fragment of an Attic red-figure lebes gamikos (bowl to mix wine and water in connection with marriage, gamein, “to marry”) shows two seated women, one of whom seems to be beside herself with suffering, tearing her hair, while a third is busy carrying a dish of grapes up a ladder, which is propped up by a fourth woman.
A fifth brings two chests, and two Erotes hover around, ca. 430-420 BCE. (=ARV 1179.3. Downloaded 23 March 2018 from: https://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/commons/7/7b/Women_Adonia_Louvre_CA1679.jpg) ................................................................. 346

Figure 79. Oregano festival where women sitting at the entrance to the event in the village square sell small plastic bags with the oregano they have collected. Dio Chór. Tinos, 4 August 2019 ...................... 364

Figure 80. Attic red-figure volute krater by the Thalos Painter. Death of Thalos. Detail showing Medea holding her case with magic drugs used to throw Thalos into a state of madness, ca. 400-390 BCE (=ARV 1338.I, see ARVcl. 324.2) ................................................................. 379

Figure 81. Various items have been put behind the holy icon on Tinos to absorb its sanctity, thus becoming healing amulets. 14 August 2011 ................................................................. 386

Figure 82. Hair offering placed on the remains of the oldest Byzantine church dedicated to the Panagia and John the Baptist on Tinos. August 2009 ................................................................. 387

Figures 83a-b. The remains of the oldest Byzantine church on Tinos is a most holy place for the many pilgrims who dedicate their pilgrimage clothes here. August 2005 and 1993 ......................................... 388

Figures 84a-b. Birth of Erichthonios; Athena receives the baby Erichthonios from the hands of the Earth Mother, Gaia. He wears a chain of amulets. Attic red-figure kalyx-krater (mixing bowl), ca. 400 BCE. a=Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, Richmond, 81.70. (Downloaded 22 April 2020 from: https://www.vmfa.museum/piction/6027262-59120469/ and https://www.theoi.com/image/T1.7Gaia.jpg) ................. 398-399

Figures 85a-b. Outside a shop in the Euangelistrias street, a sign hanging over the wristlets advertises that they are made by the nuns in the monastery. Inside the shop, a girl working there shows her health-assuring and apotropaic wristlets. Tinos, 24 July 2019 .......... 405

Figure 86. Jewel with twelve gold charms from the necropolis of Akanthos. Courtesy Archaeological Museum of Polygyros MTh 7468. Photograph by museum, where the item is kept. © Hellenic Ministry of Culture and Sports, Ephorate of Antiquities of Chalcidice and Mount Athos ......................................................... 408

Figure 87. Baubō figurine from Priene. (Downloaded 28 April 2018 from: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Baubo#/media/File:Terracotta_Baubo_figurine.jpg) ................................................................. 414
Figure 88. Kylix eye cup inscribed with Chalcidian text. It features an eye motif to ward off the Evil Eye, ca. 530 BCE. (Downloaded 05 June 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Eye-cup_Staatliche_Antikensammlungen_589.jpg) ........................................ 417

Figure 89. Cult of the Hero on Blaute. Dedication by Silon. A male figure is shown on a sandal (blaute). Around mid-fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 2565 ................................................................. 424

Figure 90a. A votive plaque depicting a female pudendum dedicated by Pamphile to Aphrodite, fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 1594 .... 426

Figure 90b. A votive gift depicting a right breast and armpit from the Asklepieion of Athens. Athens N.M. 5174 ......................................................... 427

Figure 91. A wax doll of yellow-brown penitential colour, which is offered as a votive gift by a Cypriot pilgrim. The doll has a “wound” in its head. Tinos August 1993 .......................................................... 431

Figure 92. A marble votive relief from the sanctuary of the hero-physician Aymnos near the Enneakrounos fountain on the west slopes of the Athenian Akropolis. The relief was dedicated by Lysimachides, holding a model of a human leg on which a vein indicates his disease, end of the fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 3526. (Downloaded 04 July 2019 from: https://www.namuseum.gr/wp-content/uploads/2018/10/3526_lightbox.jpg) .............................................................................. 432

Figure 93a. Sēmadi and icon in hand, an Anastenarissa dances over red-hot coals in the konaki (house) on the eve of the festival of Agios Athanasios in the village of Agia Elenē on 18 January 1992. An Anastenaris also dances, carrying an icon 444

Figures 93b-c. With the protection of Agios Kōnstantinos and Agia Elenē, Anastenarides and Anastenarisses cross the fire unharmed. 21 May 1992 ............................................................ 445

Figure 94. Dancing women at the Babo feast in the village of Monokklēsia, Greek Macedonia. 8 January 1992 ......................... 453

Figure 95. The abbess carries the holy icon of the Annunciation at the beginning of the procession from the Monastery of Kekhrovouno towards Tinos town. Tinos, 23 July 2012 .............................................. 456

Figures 96a-c. Girls dancing round dance. a: black-figure skyphos (wine-cup) with a representation of a female flute-player (auletria) and female dancers, ca. 500-490 BCE. Archaeological Museum of Thebes. (Downloaded 08 June 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Black_figure_skyphos,_AM_of_Thebes,_201200.jpg.)
b: Ten women holding twigs at a round dance, ca. 700-680 BCE. Agora Museum, Athens. Ephorate of Antiquities of Athens
List of Figures

City, Ancient Agora, P 10229.

Figure 97. The leather-clothed carnival figures known as “Kokkeri”, in the village of Flambouro, Greek Macedonia. Cheese Sunday, 8 March 1992 ................................................................. 468

Figure 98. Votive relief in the shape of a cave, which shows three dancing nymphs, accompanied by Pan playing the pipes. The head of the personified river God Acheloos is depicted at the bottom left, late fourth century BCE. Athens N.M. 1445. (Downloaded: 29 June 2023 from: https://www.flickr.com/photos/dandiffendale/3436253284/in/photostream/) .................................................................................... 473

Figure 99c. Ecstatically dancing maenad. Detail from a Paestan red-figure skyphos, ca. 330-320 BCE, British Museum, London. (Downloaded 17 August 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Dancing_maenad_Python_B_M_VaseF253.jpg) ............................................................................. 482

Figures 100a-b. Funerary amphora (two-handled pot/pitcher for storage of wine, oil). Dancing mourning women on the neck (b); lions on the shoulders; chariots and horsemen on the body. Snakes in relief are added on the lip, the handles, and the shoulder, ca. 700 BCE. (Downloaded 08 June 2021 from: https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Amphora_Met_10.210.8.jpg) ........................................................................................................ 489-490

Figure 101. The Panagia Ypermachos (that is, “Panagia the lieutenant, defender or supporter”) hovers over Greece: icon in the chapel reserved for women, Agios Nektarios’ sanctuary. Aegina, November 2011 ................................................................. 508

Figure 102. The female bronze figure, named Ἐ Μάνα Προσκυνητία (The Pilgrim Mother), at the top of the hill (facing the Church of the Annunciation). Tinos, August 2009........................................ 510
A NOTE ON TRANSLITERATION

The present book deals with ancient and modern Greek culture, and therefore many Greek names and terms. It should be mentioned that there is no unified, universally accepted system for transliteration of written and spoken Greek. I have therefore devised my own, which, with a few exceptions, is identical to the system used by the Nordic Library, Athens. However, variations may occur when quoting from a published Greek text, since there are several possible methods of transliteration.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Greek</th>
<th>Latin</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Α</td>
<td>α</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Β</td>
<td>β</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Γ</td>
<td>γ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Δ</td>
<td>δ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ε</td>
<td>ε</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ζ</td>
<td>ζ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Η</td>
<td>η</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Θ</td>
<td>θ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ι</td>
<td>i</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Κ</td>
<td>κ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Λ</td>
<td>λ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Μ</td>
<td>μ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ν</td>
<td>ν</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ξ</td>
<td>ξ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ο</td>
<td>ο</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Π</td>
<td>π</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ρ</td>
<td>ρ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Σ</td>
<td>σ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Τ</td>
<td>τ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Υ</td>
<td>υ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Φ</td>
<td>φ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Χ</td>
<td>χ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ψ</td>
<td>ψ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ω</td>
<td>ω</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Άυ</td>
<td>ου</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ευ</td>
<td>ϵυ</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Where an author’s name can be spelt in more than one way, I have followed the author’s own spelling; if they do not consistently use the same spelling, I have transcribed it according to the aforementioned system. Exceptions to this include personal and place names or terms that have well-established or standard Anglicised forms, such as Tinos, not Tēnos; Serres, not Serrōn; Anastenaris, not Anastenarēs. In general, though, Greek names are not Latinised with the letter c, which does not exist in the Greek alphabet. Sometimes I use C, as in Corfu and Cyprus, since those are the standard Anglicised forms. When a term or name can be rendered in several ways, I have employed my own system, such as Agia, not Hagia, Ayia, or Aghia. This mainly concerns Modern Greek, since Ancient Greek names and terms are more widely known in “European versions”, such as Arrephoria. This is also the reason that I have marked the spiritus asper (‘) with h on transcriptions from the Ancient Greek, since, for example, hiera and hieros gamos are well established spellings within ancient scholarship. Thus, with one exception, I have used the same system for Ancient Greek (A.G.) and Modern Greek (M.G.), although anthropologists might be critical of this usage, claiming I am attempting to demonstrate that Modern Greek derives from Ancient Greek. My intention is purely pragmatic, however, given how closely related the two systems of orthography are. I have not used the Greek alphabet in the text, but only transliteration, hoping that this rule will be more appropriate for readers less accustomed to the Greek language. When a Greek term is first used, it is shown in italics.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

My interest in healing rituals in general, and women’s role in them in particular, started many years ago. To locate a specific point in time, my interest was awakened while doing fieldwork on religious saints’ festivals and life-cycle passages in Italy in 1987 while a research fellow at the Norwegian Institute in Rome. Furthermore, women’s role in these rituals came more and more to the forefront during an extended period of fieldwork in Greece between 1991 and 1992 while I was a research fellow at the Norwegian Institute at Athens and the Academy of Athens Hellenic Folklore Research Centre. These periods of research were funded by research and travel grants from the Research Council of Norway; Italian and Greek state scholarships; research and travel grants from the Faculty of Arts, University of Bergen; Nansen grants from The Norwegian Academy of Science and Letters; travel grants from the Norwegian Institute at Athens; and Inger R. Haldorsen’s Grants for the promotion of scientific research. Later, my two-year research period as a Marie Curie Intra-European Fellow at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens from 2011 to 2013 gave me the opportunity to conduct more fieldwork, which was later resumed as a result of travel grants from the Institute for Comparative Research in Human Culture, Norway and the Norwegian Non-Fiction Writers and Translators Association in 2019. Being appointed a Lifetime Government Grant Holder (Norwegian, statsstipendiat), by the Norwegian Government (Ministries of Culture and Education and Research) in the same year, gave me the financial resources to devote myself full-time to researching and writing. This included an excellent opportunity to conduct new and broader fieldwork on saints’ festivals and women’s healing rituals connected with them, while also allowing me to carry out new research in libraries and museums in Athens in order to continue the project and write this book. My warm thanks to the Norwegian Government and its Ministries, especially former Minister of Culture Trine Skei Grande, for making this possible.

I thank the staff at the Nordic Library in Athens for providing me with a wonderfully convenient office during my stays in the city in the very room that houses the Greek part of the Loeb Classical Library—even though for me, as for others, the Perseus Digital Library (https://www.perseus.tufts.edu/) is becoming more and more practical to use, as well as the searchable tool for Greek inscriptions (https://epigraphy.packhum.org/inscriptions/main)— and assisting me in many practical matters. This especially regards their help during the years of the COVID-19 epidemic, by sending me digitally what I did not manage to locate at the University Library here in Bergen.
Acknowledgements

My thanks are also extended to the staff at the Norwegian Institute at Athens. Additionally, a special word of thanks to several Greek museums for letting me consult material I needed when working on the project, especially the National Archaeological Museum, Athens; the Akropolis Museum; the Archaeological Museum of Piraeus; and the 16th Ephorate of Prehistoric and Classical Antiquities, Greece.

On Tinos, I am deeply indebted to the staff at the Church of the Annunciation and to the Mother Superior at the Monastery of Kekhrovouno for their cooperation concerning necessary practical arrangements during my fieldwork, particularly in allowing me access to different sites and giving me permission to walk around freely, converse with people, and take pictures during the festivals. I would also like to thank the nuns for their helpfulness. Special thanks are due to Eleftheria Aphedaki and Georgos Bidalēs. On Aegina, I would particularly like to thank the Mother Superior of the Agios Nektarios monastery, Theodosia, for her help. Furthermore, a special note of thanks to her assistant, “Sister Maria”. In Athens, I would also like to thank the various priests and churchwardens, including the female attendants who have served at the Church of Agia Marina, Theseiou over the years, and also those of the Byzantine Church of Agios Nikolaos on Plaka and the priest from the University of Piraeus who have been officiating during the rituals at the Akropolis Cave, and also my informants in the cave as specified in Chapter 2. A special thanks also to Dr Kōnstantinos Mpoletēs, the architect responsible for the restoration and research of the Thrasyllos Monument and Spēlētiss Church.

Many people have commented on earlier drafts of parts of the present book or have provided invaluable help in other ways, drawing on their own expertise on women’s rituals in Greece, whether ancient or modern; in this regard, I would particularly like to thank Professors Emerita Gail Holst-Warhaft (Cornell University, USA) and E. J. W. Barber (Occidental College, Los Angeles), respectively. Several researchers working on healing rituals at the Academy of Athens Hellenic Folklore Research Centre have been of invaluable help over the years, and I thank them all, especially Dr Eleutherios Alexakēs and Maria Androulaki. I am especially grateful to the folklorist Elenē Psychogiou, who for several years has been a most helpful guide, always ready to answer my many emails and questions about our common research interest: women and their rituals. I would particularly like to thank PhD student Anna Papavassiliou, from the University of Thessaloniki, for all her help and willingness to discuss my various questions and answer my many emails. The following scholars also deserve thanks for supporting me in pursuing the topic: Professor Alexandra Cuffel (Ruhr-Universität Bochum, Germany); Professor Mojca Ramšak (University of Ljubljana, Slovenia); Provost and Dean of the Faculty Cynthia Kosso (Moravian College, Bethlehem, USA/former Professor at Northern Arizona University, USA); and Professor Emerita Roslyn M. Frank (University of Iowa, USA). Professor Diana Riboli (Panteion University of Social and Political Sciences, Athens) and Professor Taxiarchis Kolias (Institute of Historical Research and National and Kapodistrian University of Athens) also deserve thanks for believing in the project.

I am also thankful for having been invited to various conferences, all of which gave me the opportunity to present parts of this research to numerous scholarly audiences, thereby receiving invaluable feedback as well as gaining the chance to learn more specifically about healing rituals in the wider world, especially those of Eastern Europe. In particular, Dr Tatiana Minniyakhmetova (Udmurtia/Russia/Austria), Associate Professor Emerita Katya Mihailova (Bulgaria), and PhD student Irina Stahl (Romania), all of whom participate in the SIEF (Société Internationale d’Ethnologie et de Folklore) Working Group on The Ritual Year, deserve very warm thanks for their input. I am also grateful for being invited to conferences arranged by the ERC-funded “East-West” (Vernacular religion on the boundary of Eastern and Western Christianity: continuity, changes and interactions) project, headed by Professor Éva Pócs (Pécs University, Hungary), where several participants work on folk medicine and healers. A special thanks to Professor Mare Köiva at the Centre of Excellence in Estonian Studies, Tartu University, for inviting me to give an online lecture on the project in December 2020. Professor Ecaterina Lung, who participates in the International Society for Cultural History, also deserves thanks for inviting me to give a lecture on my comparative theoretical and methodological approach to ancient Greek history at the Faculty of History, University of Bucharest, Romania, in October 2016. The members of the Sacred Journeys research group also deserve thanks for commenting on my online presentations during our Zoom meetings in the era of COVID-19. A special note of thanks to Christy Morgan who has proofread the manuscript. A special word of thanks to my UK-based nephew, Llewellyn Brunsdon-Håland, who, was ever ready to help when I had technical problems with my laptop.

Last, but not least, I wish to express my gratitude to my informants: all those—particularly women, but also men—who over the years have shared their stories about miraculous healings with me, and all those who have... invited me to participate in healing rituals they performed for the recovery of their own ill loved ones. Healing rituals are by their very nature extremely emotional, coping with illness being a very difficult part of the life crises;¹ although I have done fieldwork both on Tinos, Aegina and in Athens for many years, the topic of this research has not become any easier with the passage of time, despite my familiarity with it or the fact that my research is long-standing. Therefore, I extend my most heartfelt thanks to all those who let me in; without their openness and kindness, I could not have written this book.

¹ Life crises are illness and death, both of which affect us all.
INTRODUCTION

Many years of reading ethnographic material from various parts of the world, but in particular from the Mediterranean, where I have also carried out extended periods of fieldwork, especially in Greece and Italy, have inspired many thoughts and ideas concerning the varied and complex significances of the ancient religious rituals and festivals, gender relations, and so on, that are encountered in the sources. The sources, however, tell us nothing about how we should understand what we read. How can this problem be tackled?

“Mediterranean anthropology” combined with first-hand fieldwork equip us with a set of models for social comparisons and analysis which have close parallels with the ancient sources that will be examined. This material offers us new questions with which we can interrogate the ancient sources through a comparison between modern and ancient conditions. The idea is that certain deep premises about social life, widely shared in the Mediterranean region, can be used to frame and illuminate ancient texts, bringing out their unspoken assumptions.

When doing research on modern religious festivals, I learnt that death cult, fertility cult, and healing play key roles in the festivals, and that these cults are associated with women. From this, it became possible to see a select number of ancient sources from a new angle. It also became possible to try to say something about the practical role of the cults—and therefore women—in certain festivals of the ancient polis (city state), and thus gain a new perspective on the ancient context. A prerequisite for doing this is a conscious choice to examine society from such a perspective, thus employing a different value system from that which is usual in modern western European societies. Doing so may perhaps reveal that women exercised more power in ancient society than has generally been assumed.

In two of my earlier books, Rituals of Death and Dying in Modern and Ancient Greece: Writing History from a Female Perspective from 2014 and Greek Festivals, Modern and Ancient: A Comparison of Female and Male Values from 2017 (originally published in Norwegian, 2007), I have focused on death cult and fertility cult respectively. This new research draws on the same methodology—using modern in conjunction with ancient sources—while focusing on healing.
When coupled with cultural ethnohistory, the field of medical anthropology certainly is—and will become more—crucial. Thus, the relevant ancient sources, including the Hippocratic writings, and important later material on folk medicine and healers, will be analysed in conjunction with the data from my fieldwork, from a gyno-inclusive perspective, where an appreciation of the “poetics of womanhood” is central.

History and anthropology are two disciplines that are closely related, particularly when working with ancient culture. The same combination is relevant for global studies. This work tries to rethink the history of Europe, encompassing also its Mediterranean and eastern peripheries. By its ancient and modern material, the research demonstrates a transnational, comparative, and longue durée approach to Europe’s history. It has relevance for several areas of the European peripheries. Since many of the values in Greece—and especially so in relation to healing rituals—have parallels with the values in the eastern part of Europe, there is no doubt that this comparative approach will be of great value in future research, in particular concerning the continuing expansion of the European Union, encompassing people who often think very differently from those in its western parts. The field of southeastern European studies will be of major importance in future Europe (one may just mention the immigration crisis that has haunted Europe for several years now). Regarding immigration to Europe from non-European countries, it is a fact that people from these areas share many cultural traits with Greece and the eastern European regions, such as in connection with religious popular festivals and healing rituals, which might be foreign to people from the northern and western parts of Europe and the USA and therefore difficult to understand. This research, then, has relevance for comparisons on a broader civilisational scale.

All over the Balkans and eastern parts of Europe, we meet similar rituals to the Greek healing rituals. From a comparative perspective, this research is relevant in several contexts. Particularly the parallel circumstances illustrated by the importance of worshipping miracle-working dead people in both a public and domestic context in eastern and central Europe, in the Balkans, and in the Mediterranean, clearly show the importance of taking into account both the domestic and public, female and male views in order to enhance our knowledge of European history, seen “from the grassroots”. The importance of conducting research on healing rituals in contemporary Greece—at the crossroads of cultures in the margins of Europe—by comparing them with ancient sources, also means that the book contributes to enhancing European and Mediterranean research in the era of globalisation. The field of comparative cultural research should particularly be enhanced by this study, especially as religious ideologies are flowering in modern Middle Eastern, Mediterranean, Balkan, and Russian societies.

Greece and particularly Athens has for some centuries been seen as a region of knowledge within classical studies by several foreign countries by setting up their own research institutes there. Athens and Greece, however, also have their own important centres of learning, and is further a region of knowledge within post-classical studies. It can by its rich resources provide important material for comparative studies, although this fact has not been so easily acknowledged in the north of Europe where interpretation in practice often neglects knowledge of the culture that exists in Greece as an important comparative tool to contextualise ancient sources. Doing research in a genuine Greek environment for many years now has taught me to provide a broader eastern European and Mediterranean approach, complementing the northwestern European filter through which much of the variety of European experience tends to be interpreted. By focusing on “the margins of Europe” both from a gendered (that is, Greek women) and spatial (including “grassroots”) perspective, this book also seeks to challenge the tendency to define a clear-cut “European identity” with reference to an imagined “civilised European centre” contra various peasant cultures, such as those of southeastern Europe. In the contemporary situation it might be more fruitful to ask the question—what is and was Europe at its margins?

To compare ancient and modern healing rituals, and women’s role in these, multidisciplinary research is required. This book therefore interrelates history, anthropology/ethnography, archaeology, ethnology/folklore, gender studies, and religious studies. Accordingly, the book offers a willingness to employ multiple, differing approaches towards the topic under investigation, and aims to bridge the distances to other academic disciplines. Consequently, it allows both for a contextualisation of prior research and a synthesis of multiple academic areas, and so intends to pave the way for future studies. This also relates to the fact that I have experienced how many young scholars across the disciplinary borders feel the need to draw on modern as well as cross-period material in their studies of both ancient and modern Greek and Mediterranean cultures. Unfortunately, there is still a gap in scholarly opportunities in this area, so those who venture into comparative approaches still work independently in what could be a dynamic new field if given sufficient focus. The present study intends to contribute towards that goal.

By working in the field and setting the findings in a broad framework of history and prehistory, and so offering a sustained cross-period examination of the subject of healing and gender, exploring continuities between historical periods as well as the ways in which the texts and traditions diverge, the study reveals how interdisciplinary and cross-period studies can illuminate otherwise-overlooked points and lead to reconsiderations of the subject of “gender and healing”, which scholarship has historically believed to be well understood. Consequently, the book challenges long-established theories on women and gender relations in modern and ancient Greece, but also beyond.